MISCELLANEOUS READING. THE CHINESE PASSION FOR OPIUM

Yet there never was found, in any age or in any clime, a tribe, a race, or a nation, which had not some stimulant in which they habitually indulged. Mrs. Chinaman takes her mundungus; her husband varies the same pleasure with an occasional drink of beer, or whiskey, gin, or British brandy. for they are all recognized means of in toxication, and British manufactures. But he steadfastly refuses - Que voulez vous' 1 open a Dispensary for the treatment of this est fait comme cela. A Chinaman loves opi class of diseases, in all their forms, and to give um as he loves nothing else. The head of Medical advice gratis, to all who apply by let a Parsee house at Hong Kong was so civil as to take me into his warehouse and to open two chests of opium, that I might see the drug as it passes in commerce. The first consisted of balls, the size of a large apple dumpling, and when cut open the mass was found to be solid; the other was tull of objects which a commander in the pavy not long since ordered his men to return to the owners of a captured junk .-"Arn't you ashamed, my lads, to loot a lot of miserable Dutch cheeses." The "Dutch cheeses" were fine Patna opium worth about £5 each. They are globes of thick dark jelly enclosed in a crust, not unlike the rind of a cheese. My Parsee acquaintance tap ped one with a fragment of an iron fasten ing of a chest, and drew forth about a spoonful of the evil-smelling drug. It was not the opium which engaged my attention; it was the effect produced by it upon the surrounding coolies. I never before saw real excitement in a Chinamau's face. I've seen them tried for their lives and condemn ed to death, and I've seen them test the long-suffering patience of Mr. Tudor Davies in the Hong Kong Police court where that gentleman is daily engaged in laborious endeavors to extract truth out of cofficting lies. I've seen them laugh heartily at an obscene gesture at a singsong, and I once saw a witness grin with great delight as be unexpectedly recognized his most intimate friend, a tradesman of reputed wealth, among a crowd of prisoners in the dock. But these coolies, when they saw that opium, opened their borizontal, slit shaped eyes, till they grew round and starting, their limbs, so lax and limpid when not in actual straint of labor, were stiff from excitement, every head was pressed forward, every hand seemed ready to clutch. There was a possibility that it would be put down upon the window sill near which we were standing. I could see the shadow of fingers ready to slide in. It was almost certain that it would be thrown aside-there was the grand hope of an opium debauch gratis, and this was the state of mind that hope created. The Chinese governments have long ceased to strive against this passion for opium. I doubt whether they really did ever strive against it. At one time, when the balance of the trade was against China, the opium was drawing the Sycee silver out of the country, and Lin thought it absolutely necessary as a matter of State policy to stop the traffic. A Chinese official is the Joseph Surface of diplomacy; be his deeds good or evil they are certain to be concealed under a mass of fine

We have no Magazine reading like Black wood, nor any Reviews to match the British republications. They keep us posted up in the world's literature and great political movements as regarded in their philosophi-A pamphlet will be sent gratis and post paid to cal aspects. We need such exponents of the thought of the age. Each of these great Re views sheds a light and coloring of it's own over the subjects of which it treats, and each maintains its own side of some world-mooted question. The reading they furnish is instructive beyond the books of the time, for we drink in them of the spirit of letters. They have gone throughout the length and breadth of our land, and visit every fireside where the arts and literature are cherished. The flashy prints of the day may afford an hour's amusement, but the Quarterlies and Black wood are conned more carefully during lessure, and laid away for the preservation of their rich contents.

Blackwood needs no "illustration" to recommend its stores of erudite and popular writing. Its circulation, even in this country, has not been diminished by pretentious rivalry. By the enterprise of the American publisher, we obtain the numbers almost as soon as they are issued abroad, and at a rate astonishingly cheap.
